Judgment Notes

Removing dash-asides worked -- the draft reads cleanly with zero occurrences and the transitions read as two sentences or a colon instead, not stitched. The mixed-content formatting is a real improvement: 'Ways to add products' and 'Steps to add a primary feed' now read as actual scannable lists instead of run-on paragraphs, and the 'Disclose AI-generated titles/descriptions' note callout stands out appropriately as the one section flagged as newer/less settled guidance. The one pattern worth flagging: with dashes gone, nearly every list lead-in now ends in a colon ('...require:', '...areas to double-check:', '...real requirements:'), which across 8+ sections starts to feel like a new repetitive tic replacing the old one. Sentence complexity is also on the denser side (avg 25.5 words, Flesch 35.1 -- fairly difficult), appropriate for the PPC/agency audience but worth keeping an eye on if future drafts trend the same way.
